● Overview

The transaction volume of the API market was generally stable this week, and the price range of the single-category market was relatively small. In early July, compared with the same period last year, the average price increase was 8.3%. Mainly from the price growth of florfenicol, macrolides and quinolones. In the near future, market supply and demand have basically been balanced, and common supplies have been running well. Please pay attention to the expected market supply changes caused by the reduction of factory-side production and maintenance under the influence of high temperature and high humidity.
